

the 1990s, the number of people in the world who are undernourished has increased from 250 million to 800 million (FAO 1996).

There is a growing awareness of the need to address the problem of undernourishment. The United Nations World Food Programme (WFP) has been instrumental in this regard, and has been successful in increasing the number of people who are receiving food aid from 100 million in 1990 to 150 million in 1995. However, the WFP's efforts are limited by the fact that it is a humanitarian organization and is not allowed to engage in development activities. The WFP's mandate is to provide food aid to people in need, and it is not allowed to engage in activities that would be seen as interfering with the work of other organizations. This has led to a growing awareness of the need for a more integrated approach to food aid, one that takes into account the need for development activities as well as the need for food aid.

The Integrated Food Security Programme (IFSP) is a new initiative that is designed to address the problem of undernourishment in a more integrated way. The IFSP is a joint initiative of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and the WFP. The IFSP is designed to provide food aid to people in need, while also addressing the underlying causes of undernourishment. The IFSP is designed to be a more integrated approach to food aid, one that takes into account the need for development activities as well as the need for food aid.
